Malted Cider.

This is an excellent bedtime drink when one feels that he has taken cold or just after coming in from a wetting in the storm. Pound half an ounce of stick cinnamon and ten or twelve cloves and bruise. Put into a saucepan with half a grated nutmeg, cover with a half pint of boiling water and infuse on the back of the stove for 15 minutes. Strain, add sugar to taste and stir into a pint of hot cider.

Mrs. T. C. Carr has been elected by the Ladies' Literary Club to represent them in co-operation with the above committee.

Big Delegation From Vermont Boards of Trade for the Annual Meeting of The Greater Vermont Association at Montpelier

Reports received by The Greater Vermont Association indicate that the attendance at the annual meeting at Montpelier on July 12 and 13 will surpass the attendance at the annual meetings in 1914 and 1915.

Brattleboro, Bellows Falls, and Rutland expect to send parties of fifty or more. Forty tickets to the dinner have already been sold at Bennington. The report from Lyndonville several days ago was to the effect that 18 tickets had already been sold. The newly formed Board of Trade at Brandon will send a party of 25. Other boards are working on plans to send from five to twenty-five representatives.

The Association is urging every community in the state to send delegates and thus to have a part in these meetings and conferences which will aim to speed up the "big drive" for progress and development which is on throughout the Green Mountain state.

Vermont and the Chautauqua.

The Chautauqua idea is comparatively new in Vermont. Many Vermonters are from Missouri concerning the whole scheme. Some seem to think it is a kind of cross between a campmeeting and a circus. My observation has been that the good Chautauqua towns have been the towns where the community spirit prevailed, and where the people pulled together and loved each other more or less.

The Chautauqua idea is still the same idea originated by Bishop Vincent and expressed in the big institution at Chautauqua Lake. All Chautauquas are modeled after this idea, although the business part is worked out in different ways.

The Circuit Chautauquas, which are the only ones Vermont has known, come to the towns for six or seven days instead of all summer, and the business part originates with the different Chautauqua Bureaus, but they can be operated only with the cooperation of the communities.

There is a purpose in the Chautauqua idea other than mere money getting. Some of the organizations have the purpose distinctly stated in the charter.

The Lincoln Chautauquas were started with the express purpose of promoting National Prohibition of the liquor traffic, and it was so stated in the charter. The general purpose of most of them is, I think, to develop a healthy community spirit, that makes for the growth of the towns. One expressed this purpose:—To enable the people of the towns and cities to regulate the leisure hours of the citizens.

In my work for the Redpath Chautauquas, I have found all connected with the institution to be fine upstanding people to meet. The "crew boys" that look after the big tent and see to the comfort of the audience are mostly college boys, spending their vacations this way. The platform managers are school principals, also putting in the summer time on the circuit. So the Chautauqua brings a nice, clean set of people to the towns. In at least one company, not even smoking is allowed on the Chautauqua ground and if any one connected with the organization is seen entering a saloon, it is sufficient ground for discharge. The people who are interested in the uplift and the welfare of the communities usually are Chautauqua boosters.

The Circuit Chautauquas have flourished in the Middle West. Vermonters are excellent people down deep in their hearts, but their spirits do not rush to the surface and overflow in friendliness to each other in quite the western way. The Chautauqua helps to cultivate the "Everybody get together and pull together" spirit, so I hope Vermont will welcome the Chautauquas, and not freeze them out.

Possibly a few words from Edward Amherst Ott's speech in response to the address of welcome to the Woodsville, N. H., Chautauqua may not be amiss in closing.

"Chautauqua is a movement, not an institution. You cannot see it with the eyes. It is not a tent and a canvas fence. Our battle line is far flung. In more than three thousand places the greater canvas tops will be lifted, and in every state the people will gather to hear and listen and respond to the spirit of this free pulpit. Growing out of our democracy this movement is the most democratic thing in America.

For over a century we have been trying this experiment of a republic, but most of our institutions are not democratic. They do not express the republic. We have schools and colleges, but the management is not democratic. Their plans are borrowed from the old world, and carry the faults of world old errors. Furthermore, they are provincial in a sad way. Each one has its own traditions, and is proud to maintain them. To one who visits many colleges each year, and talks with students and teachers, the local nature is very apparent.

"Provincial leaders make provincial hearers. The man who addresses crowds in California one month, and audiences in Maine the next and visits all the states each year, cannot well maintain local viewpoints, and local idiosyncrasies become amusing to him. He ceases to care for the little things; he sees the unity of life and becomes cosmopolitan in mind and heart.

"This free pulpit has done much good, but perhaps the greatest good is that it has made a new set of teachers. On this platform sectarian preachers have become religious leaders, and partisan politicians have become statesmen."
